

Since the beginning of 2002, when Indiana's law covering phone solicitations went into effect, our home has received exactly one unwanted solicitation call, from an exempt category caller. We would strongly resent any change that would reverse this astounding relief from daily invasions.

Furthermore, as we never respond to any phone solicitation, even from sources we otherwise support, continuation of strict regulation would also serve the interest of potential callers. They would be spared the time and expense of fruitless attempts.

We do not prefer state law over Federal law in principle, but we request that the excellent protection offered by the current state law be maintained.

Writing for a whole family:

Albrecht Holschuh